STAYMAKER (noun):

A CORSET MAKER, A MAKER OF STAYS

In the late 1800s, entrepreneur E.K. Warren revolutionized the manufacturing of buggy whips and women's corsets by replacing traditional whalebone with a new product made from turkey feather quills. He built his factory and business right here in Three Oaks, MI. Once home to Warren's expert 'Staymakers,' the old Featherbone Factory was meticulously revitalized and repurposed by owners Johanna and Bill Welter, with an eye on maintaining the building's rich history.

Staymaker's maple floor is original to the factory building, worn by the hundreds of workers who brought this place to life. Naturally seasoned by decades of sun, rain, and wind, the barn wood above our bar and on our walls came from the Welter Family farm, located just down the road in Putnam County, IN. The farm also provided the wood used for our tables. Throughout the building, you'll find evidence of its industrial roots. Journeyman is proud to share the story of E.K. Warren and hopes that he would join us in a toast to the good people of Three Oaks, hard work, and the endeavor of entrepreneurship.
