Journeyman Distillery is housed in the historic Featherbone Factory, built in 1883 by E.K. Warren. Back then, it made corsets and buggy whips using turkey feather bones, rather than the stiffer whalebone commonly used at the time. The factory has been restored, preserving many original features to uphold its unique history.

ETHYL and MASH

The name of our shiny copper still is Ethyl. A still is a machine that helps us create our journeyman spirits. We use grains such as corn, barley, wheat, and rye to make alcohol through a process called fermentation. After the alcohol is made in the still, it is stored in oak barrels for aging and later bottling. And meet Mash—our lovable distillery dog! She doesn't run the machines, but she keeps the grounds
